Jiashu Miao is a senior student from University of California, Los Angeles majoring in Applied Math and Statistics, and he currently works at Sony Pictures in LA as a data analyst intern, business intelligence division.

Having good understanding of maths, statistics, computer science and occupied with strong programming skills, he is passionate about developing analytical application in business, fulfilling business objectives with statistical insights and data science related tools, as well as other related quantitative areas where he could apply his technical strengths to benefit others and expand his scope of knowledge.

Training to be a positive and hard-working young professional, he has experience in data analysis, database admin, modeling, visualization, and software development several systems, including Linux servers when he worked as interns in different types of companies. He also has experience in building business metric, product analysis, decision making, data management, and data security over hundreds of gigabytes of data. Besides, he is equipped with research ability from his two-year experience working as a quantitative research assistant at one of the largest labs in UCLA, and He also keeps his passion to learn new things.

Jiashu is gifted, dedicated and adventurous, with innovative mind. He is proficient in R, SQL, Python, Tableau, C++, and familiar with Linux, Java Node.js, Window Scripts, github and other popular framework; he past experience also occupies him with strong communication, problem-solving, interpersonal skills, making Jiashu a great team member to provide essential insight, provide technical support and leverage business problems.